Globalism Series No 1

Words of Care and Concern

In this brochure "Globalism", "Ut Unum Sint" (That We All May Be One), analyses the development of peace at a time when the international community is poised to begin a "New World Order". Please remember that we are considering systems and principles of worship and government, not individuals. We should be thankful that God's love and mercy is such that He would speak with impartial honesty on every subject.

Globalism

Introduction

“For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them.” Matthew 13:17.

The “New World Order” is a term that has come to our attention only in recent times. However, there is nothing new about it, for it has been on the world agenda and planned for more than twenty years.

Many people are ignorant as to what is involved, and the different governments of the world are not about to disclose to the people the real intent of what they are trying to achieve.

In a speech to the media, Mr. David Rockefeller “thanked the press for not revealing the real meaning behind the term the ‘New World Order’.” From the contents of this speech, and other information coming to hand, it is obvious that there is a “hidden agenda” to its introduction.

In a publication entitled “The Keys of This Blood,” written by Malachi Martin, concerning the “New World Order” (NWO), we find this statement on page 15: “Willing or not ready or not, we are all involved in an all out no holds barred three way global competition. Most of us are not competitors however we are the stakes. For the competition is about who will establish the first one-world system of government that has ever existed in the society of nations. It is about who will hold and wield the dual power of authority and control over each of us as individuals, and over all of us together as a community . . . The competition is all out because now that it has started there is no way that it can be reversed or called off.”

Dear reader, are you ready for such a competition? Today something unmatched in history is taking place.

The purpose of this booklet is an endeavour to bring before the reader some facts and possibilities as to the nature and purpose of the NWO, not to cast doubt or condemnation upon anyone.

While controversial, it is hoped that the reader will take the time to acquaint himself or herself with the message found within. Abraham Lincoln once said, “Those who forget their past history are doomed to repeat it.”

May God add His blessing to all those who read to keep an open mind and to meditate carefully on what has been written.

Global Bankruptcy

In recent years something fascinating has been happening. Little by little a distinctive profile has begun to appear, sometimes openly, sometimes cleverly disguised. A military danger has arrived and has muscled its way into our lives, unwanted but irresistible, giving mankind a globe-threatening power, until today we have become accustomed to living each hour under the shadow of such threats.

But while the military danger was forcing its way into history, another problem has stolen in almost unnoticed, as quietly and imperceptibly as a pre-dawn fog. It is an economic threat, and its steady arrival is deceptive, for within it are the seeds of world turmoil, worse than anything else short of global war. Furthermore it has all happened in the past twenty to twenty five years.

We shall go into some detail about how it happened, not necessarily because we are on the verge of difficult times, but to show you how a whole series of events, seemingly disconnected from each other, can combine to create a situation in which the world could be plunged into a crisis such as we have never seen.

It was the summer of 1973. U.S. and Australian troops had left Vietnam. With the exception of Watergate, American life was returning to normal, and at the service station petrol could be purchased at a very reasonable price by today's standard. People did not realize it at the time, but the cost of fuel was (and still is) one of the most important factors in their lives. If the energy price structure cracked, the way would be opened for a whole series of economic troubles: interest rates and inflation would soar; Australians as well as Americans would learn strange terms such as "stagflation"; recession would rob large groups of their hard-won economic benefits; things would never be quite the same again. However, in the summer of 1973, doomsayers were not particularly believable, for people could still fill their fuel tanks for $10 and the speed limit on the open highway was still unrestricted in many areas. It was summertime and the living was easy.

Then autumn came on the eve of Yom Kippur 1973. Crack Egyptian troops climbed aboard personnel carriers and headed east toward the Israeli defence lines beyond the Suez Canal. The Middle East was at war, and the effects of that war reached into the hearts of Americans as well as Australians. Angered at Western support of Israel, Arab nations did something heretofore seen mostly in federal government nightmares—they turned off the oil supply to the West. In America, cars lined up for blocks to buy scarce and increasingly expensive fuel. In Australia, “the lucky country”, fuel prices skyrocketed. Unrecognized as such, an event had arrived capable of setting the stage for a crisis of the likes that we have never seen.

As the price of oil soared far beyond its cost of production, a relatively few nations found themselves awash in money. So much money that it is difficult to comprehend. In a single week, nations in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) took in enough funds to buy every newspaper and broadcast station in America. In just thirty weeks these nations earned a sum equal to the value of every stock listed on the London Stock Exchange, and almost immediately they began to face a problem: just what does one do with such a huge volume of cash?

The answer they decided upon was logical enough, and so came the next step in the plan. Deposit their surplus in the world’s largest banks, multinational giants able to arrange huge loans, thus generating interest income on their funds.

The plan had a side benefit. Industry, reeling from energy price increases, would have plenty of money to borrow while adapting to the new cost of fuel. All in all, not a bad plan. It just might have worked, except that the economy, racked by the skyrocketing cost of energy, was plunging into the deepest recession since the 1930’s. As a result, there weren’t enough borrowers to use all the money which OPEC was depositing. Instead, thousands of workers were laid off, deepening the recession with decreased buying power. Thus the world passed into a time of weird economic trouble with stubborn recession, the humbling of once mighty trade unions, a federal debt that was staggering and people wondering about the security of their pensions and savings.

The burden of wealth had passed from the oil producers to the banks, and it quickly proved to carry with it a mysterious curse. In Saudi Arabia, it had drawn problems—the way a magnet draws tacks—to the Muslim social system, which saw the entire Middle East become a threatened battle field. All that for the sake of an oil price rise! Oil had turned to gold, and the gold was beginning to give off corrosive fumes as if it were brewing up something filled with menace. Now wealth’s troublesome responsibility passed to the multinational bankers who were about to learn for themselves just how disagreeable so much money could be. The bankers’ problem was serious. They had large sums of Arab money upon which they had to pay interest, but there were too few borrowers generating income for the banks. A solution suggested itself. If private business could not use all the available loan funds, what about governments—whole countries—sovereign nations? What about Poland, Brazil, Argentina, Mexico, Indonesia, South Korea, Russia and Japan—and there is always that relatively young and developing nation called AUSTRALIA, “the lucky country”. Nothing could be safer than a loan to a sovereign country, could it?

Before anyone really knew what was happening, three western hemisphere nations alone owed more money than was owned by the stockholders of America’s nine largest banks. Then the bottom fell out. World recession struck again, interest rates soared, whole nations mortgaged up to their capitals couldn’t even meet the interest payments and Australia wasn’t far behind. All these things pushed the banking community to a grim game of “What If?”. What if the debtor nations collapsed? What if these nations couldn’t pay their debts?

Data Casting

If the worst should occur and major lenders should face losses they could not cover, the world economy would probably react much like a living organism after a massive haemorrhage. Have you ever wondered why most of the business world deals in US dollars? The dollar serves as a primary vehicle for world trade and thousands of millions of dollars would have vanished into failed crops, private jets and half-built nuclear reactors in the third world. Only an immediate transfusion of dollars could revive the organisers of global commerce, and only one entity in the world, the US Federal Reserve System board of directors could authorize creation of the money.

So today, financial strategists have discussed a plan in a “worst-case” scenario. It would involve each debtor country putting in place a system whereby it could not only identify the population individually, but control their spending patterns. These nations would also be required to guarantee certain natural resources in a programme known as “Debt for Equity Swap” (better known as “Privatisation”!). The latter is already a reality in certain third world countries, as well as Australia. America would create enough new money to meet the losses. It would then lend it to the world’s failed banks or governments so that they could resume business. To put it another way, the United States of America would become the lender of last resort to the world. It would hold the mortgage on global commerce. It would dictate policy to a degree rarely seen in history.

The International Monetary Fund (IMF) has been established as the institution given the task of implementing the plan and resolving the debtor nations’ economic woes—all to the advantage of the United States of America. Remember this programme is not the imagination of some prophet of doom—it is a distinct reality. It has been discussed at Pentagon level and our government leaders are fully aware of it. In fact it has already begun to happen.

Australia has a fun-loving “she’ll-be-right-mate” attitude to life. We have gone from a conservative Christian country to a nation rushing headlong into ruin and into what many believe to be a Godless country, paying little or no attention to the future. In the light of all that we see and know of what is happening around us, could there still be some hope, some truth in the word of God in those misunderstood books of prophecy such as the book of Revelation?

“And He causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark [identification] . . . And that no man might buy or sell, save he that hath the mark, . . .” Revelation 13:16, 17.

This prophecy of John the Divine, in AD 96, can no longer be relegated to the distant future. The machinery for its fulfilment is in place. To an astonishing degree we have lost control of our global economy, and this otherwise insignificant event could precipitate the scene foretold by the prophet John. Soon we’ll all be learning lessons too late. In order to avoid IMF intervention, Australia is being forced to sell off its natural resources and assets in an effort to reduce its foreign debt. As part of the global economy, we are also learning that we are required to meet our responsibility to the debtor nations in our region—after all, these are our trading partners we are told.

As a hostile struggle between capital and labour begins to push its way into our lives, many ordinary people are beginning to realise that they are helpless to do anything about it. Urged on by the threatened loss of security, many are becoming fearful of what might happen in the future.

Global Communications

What about buying and selling? In 1946, the US army began using one of the world's first electronic computers. Nicknamed "ENIAC", it was a monstrous device. Its 18,000 vacuum tubes required 140,000 watts of electrical power and filled several rooms. Yet it could work complex calculations in a fraction of a second. Ten years later the transistor revolutionized electronics. Ten more years passed, and engineers developed something called micro circuitry, shrinking circuits that once filled entire rooms to a chip the size of a fingernail. Today, computers with the power of "ENIAC" can be put in one's pocket.

showing exactly what you bought. (Have you ever wondered how much of that data a computer might choose to remember?) If you use a credit card, you are so well known to the system that in many stores data terminals can almost instantly certify your credit. From where we are right now it would be a short step to a totally cashless society in which you would never need to touch money physically and your net worth would become a series of digital entries on a bank's computer disk. If that should happen, your only source of spending power could become an electronically encoded card, without which you might find yourself unable to buy even the basic necessities of life.

In blunt fact, a system suggestive of that described in Revelation is already here. We have welcomed it into our lives, lured by convenience, not stopping to realize that the same system that makes buying easy could also be used to make buying impossible. The equipment is already in place.

Today the world is on the brink of an economic catastrophe with East Asian economies currently locked in "meltdown" mode. We have seen the banking systems in these countries at the point of collapse, with many banks themselves insolvent, taking with them the life savings of thousands of their customers. Many of these people have been reduced to poverty. It is reported that Indonesia alone has approximately thirty million people approaching starvation, and a further seventy million living on less than A$1.00 per day.

Japanese banks are reputed to be the largest in the world and it is not widely known that they carry much of the burden of world debt. We have also witnessed the total collapse of the Russian economy. It is said that Russia,

With the remarkable growth of data processing has come a whole new way of shopping, in which laser equipped cash registers recognize your purchase, compute the price and print a receipt by world economic standards, is a “basket case” that threatens to bring down its government as well as its social infrastructure as they know it. Latin America is expected to be the next region to experience an economic tsunami, and economic conditions in the world will become worse.

Ever since the dawn of time man has endeavoured to rule over or to control his fellow man. It seems as though it has never been possible for men to live in peace with one another. The history of this world is littered with records of people who just had to get control of the world. The question has often been asked, “Will anyone ever get control again?” It seems that this has not been possible since the Roman empire.

In the past, all that was needed was good, well-equipped armed forces, and an attack would be made in an endeavour to conquer different countries. However, in recent years all-out war between different countries has become unacceptable. No longer are wars considered an acceptable method to gain control of other countries. However, we should never think that the present situation means that, in order to achieve their aims, there are not men or countries who do not harbour the desire to gain control of as much of this world as they can.

People the world over are astonished at what they see taking place in the world today. Nations that once held each other as the bitterest enemies, having totally different ideologies and outlooks on life, have suddenly torn down the walls and barriers that have kept them apart for so many years. Families have been reunited, governments have been overthrown and political leaders have been removed and even put to death. All this has taken place in a short period of time. Like a whirlwind, this new movement has swept through eastern Europe, as well as the Middle East, leaving many bewildered and asking questions as to whether this movement will be confined to eastern Europe, or will it spill over into the West as well? Will it end in war or peace, prosperity or recession?

As the economic crisis deepens, we see nation after nation being drawn into the net that seems to have been cast world-wide. Can any country escape the fallout from the “meltdown” which has occurred in Asia and Russia? There is little doubt that the situation will get worse. People are beginning to suggest that the only way to achieve long term stability with guaranteed exchange rates is through a global currency. This may seem an extreme measure to some. However, we are about to see such a move. During the next twelve months or so, we will begin to see two things introduced into society which will fix the destiny of the world. The first will be the introduction of the Eurodollar. It is expected to become the most stable currency in the world and will certainly become the basis for a global monetary system.

At this point, most governments and politicians are not ready to accept this inevitable fact—they are not ready to surrender their domestic independence for international financial stability. However, a few more exchange rate slumps—one or two more economic “meltdowns,” coupled with some more stock market crashes, will bring the politicians to the point where they will realize that they have no choice in the matter. This will require the surrender of our economic sovereignty.

The IMF is set to become the new Central Bank of Issuance with the power to create enough money to fully fund a global monetary system based on the Eurodollar. In a recent world economic forum in Singapore, seven hundred global business leaders and economic policy makers called on world leaders to meet and look for short term solutions to the present crisis, and to begin discussions on the formation of a New World Financial Architecture to cope with the New Global Financial System. The matter could not be stated more plainly than that!

The next important item on the agenda is the implementation of the United States of Europe. We are soon to see a coalition formed between The United States of Europe and The United States of America. This coalition will form the foundation for a world government, and all the world will be pressured to become a part of that government. The United States will assume the role of Chief Administrator. She will exercise all the power of this new structure—only America has the infrastructure and technology to do so.

During the past two years a treaty known as the “Multilateral Agreement on Investments” (MAI) has been drawn up. This treaty is sponsored by the United States of America and the European Union and will alarm even the most ardent supporter of World Government as its tentacles will reach into every aspect of our lives. Not one single political leader is saying anything about it. The following is an excerpt from that treaty by courtesy of the book “Australia 2000” by Jeremy Lee, pages 199 and 200:

“The Multilateral Agreement on Investments has been in negotiations since May 1995 . The final agreement is scheduled for completion in May of this year (1997). However, it must be ratified by the legislatures of the signing countries . . . The Multilateral Investment Agreement (MIA), as the proposal is known, is under consideration at the OECD. Its purpose is to grant transnational investors the unrestricted “right” to buy, sell and move business—and other assets—wherever they want, whenever they want. To achieve this goal, the MIA would ban a wide range of regulatory laws now in force around the globe. It would also preempt future effort to hold transnational corporations and investors accountable to the public . . . The Agreement’s backers (the United States and the European Union) intend to seek assent from the 27 industrial countries that make up the OECD and then pressure developing countries to sign . . .

“Although the public has been denied access to actual drafts of the Agreement, reviews of OECD working group reports and an official summary of the MIA’s main features provide a clear picture . . .

“The MIA would force countries to treat foreign investors as favourably as domestic companies. Laws placing conditions on foreign investment . . . would be prohibited . . . Corporations would find it easier and more profitable to move investments, including production facilities, to “low wage” wage countries. At the same time, developing countries would be denied the tools necessary to wrest benefits from foreign investment. Efforts to promote local development by earmarking subsidies for home-grown businesses and limiting foreign ownership of local resources would also be barred. If adopted, the MIA will mean foreclosure of Third World development strategies, increased job flight from industrial nations and enormous new pressures on countries, rich and poor, to compete for increasingly mobile investment capital by lowering environmental and labour standards.

“A key MIA provision could also threaten corporate accountability laws . . . The MIA takes aim at statutes in any nation that link the provision of subsidies, tax-breaks and other benefits to a corporation’s behaviour. This could be used to challenge a host of local, state and federal measures . . . Perhaps most disturbing, the MIA would preempt strategies for restricting corporate flight to low-wage areas—a major cause of job loss and income stagnation in the industrialized world. On top of the damage done by plant closing and layoffs, corporations use the threat of flight to undermine the bargaining power of unions and scare policy-makers away from the regulation, taxation and public spending necessary to raise living standards . . .

“In its scope and enforcement mechanisms, the MIA represents a dangerous leap over past international agreements. It lets any corporation that objects to a city, state or national law bring suit before an international MIA panel—which could then order the law overturned as a violation of the pact.

Governments would enjoy no reciprocal right to sue corporations on the public's behalf. The full extent of the drafter's ambitions is reflected in World Trade Organisation director-general Renato Ruggiero's recent characterisation of the MIA negotiations: 'We are writing the Constitution of a single global economy'.”

Once again it cannot be stated more plainly than this. “Willing or not, ready or not,” we are all going to be part of a global institution. The question remains, however, how will it all come about?

Many believe that the supposed Y2K Millennium Bug was nothing more than a hoax. It would appear that only certain Governments and big business in the Western World put forward the effort and funds to correct the situation. However, not even those countries that made little or no effort experienced the problems that were supposed to threaten our way of life. “Why?” we might ask. The reason is that Y2K was a smoke screen for something much bigger. If Globalism is to be fully accomplished, then the infrastructure must first be in place enabling the new system to function on a global basis. All countries would then need to be compliant with one another at all levels. Ask yourself the question, “How could this be achieved most effectively?” Y2K would be one very good way. We have just witnessed the greatest “Information Technology Upgrade” since the introduction of computers. The ability to DATA CAST on a global scale is now before us. None were wise enough to envision what was occurring until it was too late. The Biblical account of the apocalypse suggests that something of this nature will be required to implement the measures soon to be experienced in the world.

One further aspect of this New Order that remains to be viewed. It is to coincide with the Jubilee 2000. As we approach the end of the Millennium, towards the end of 2000, the Vatican will announce some form of a world church with suggested names as United Religions Organisation. With the blessing of the United Nations, it plans to do for the religions of the world just what the United Nations has done for the nations of the world. Bring them all together. The question needed to be answered is this: “Who will be the leader of this NEW GLOBAL CIVILIZATION?”

NATO AT 50: Heads of state gather for the alliance's anniversary summit in Washington.

The Superpower Speaks

IT WAS during the war code-named “Operation Desert Storm” in 1991, that U.S. President George Bush in his speech to the nation chose to announce to the world the plan for the New World Order (NWO).

Quietly but methodically, Iraq had positioned its armed forces near to the borders of Kuwait. Fighter planes escorting squadrons of bombers had taken off from Iraqi air fields and were now circling high above the desert awaiting the command to attack. In one decisive blow, Kuwait was to fall to the might of the Iraqi forces. Unprepared, Kuwait had soon fallen and was now under the control of one Saddam Hussein who had not only taken control of the country but of its vast reserves of oil as well. Then he threatened to do the same to Saudi Arabia. If such a move was to succeed it would plunge the entire developed world into a crisis such as had not been witnessed since there was a nation.

The USA had to respond because some twenty five years earlier a plan had been formed and promises made that compelled her to protect both Kuwait and the Saudis: for these were but two of four countries in the world that held reserves of what is known as “white oil”, the bench mark for the price of all other oils. White oil is to oil as gold is to the world’s currencies.

A promise had been made to Kuwait and Saudi Arabia that if they were to persuade the Arab nations to form an alliance and embrace the idea of a NWO under the supposed authority of United Nations they would be guaranteed in return whatever price was seen fit for their oil. It was in the mid-seventies that the Western world in particular witnessed an energy crisis from which it has still not recovered.

Having gained the co-operation of the Arab Nations the stage was set: just initiate a crisis that in turn would panic the world into accepting the idea behind the NWO.

“It’s a big idea: a New World Order, where diverse nations are drawn together in common cause [peace keeping] . . . only the United States has both the moral standing and the means to back it up.” (President G. Bush in his State of the Union address. Los Angeles Times February 18, 1991.)

The Iraqi war was a means to an end—initiate a crisis, then give the world a demonstration of what could be done. The media Moguls were ready, the television cameras rolled while the world sat with their eyes glued to the TV set, as they watched an event take place that would make the idea both credible and acceptable in the eyes of the people.

President Bush had made it very clear that he saw the Gulf War as a decisive factor in the moves for a New World Order. The military effort, distinct from previous peace-keeping missions, was the beginning of a permanent Global UN Army. Obviously the emergence of a Global Army needed a spectacular launch to convince the world of the value of such an army.

But what of the hidden agenda? Under the auspices of the United Nations, a World Parliament has been established. It is known as the World Constitution and Parliament Association (WCPA). It is envisaged that once the groundwork for the NWO is complete, this World Parliament will replace the United Nations, thus assuming responsibility for nearly all aspects of our lives.

“Our way of life as individuals and as citizens of the nations; our families and our jobs; our trade and commerce and money; our educational systems and our religions and our cultures; even the badges of our national identity, which most of us have always taken for granted, all will have been powerfully and radically altered forever. No one can be exempted from its effects. No sector of our lives will remain untouched.”

Malachi Martin “The Keys of this Blood” 1990, page 15.

Under this World Parliament, widespread and sweeping changes would need to be made in many countries. Australia would not be exempt. In order for Australia to participate in this parliament we must become a REPUBLIC (a Plato republic).

When Great Britain fully enters the European Union, and the British Pound along with the Bank of England is abolished, our sovereign Queen will have become a European citizen. The Queen will then be in the position not of sovereignty but of *suzerainty. Who will then be Australia’s head of state ? When the republican advocates realize this, they will soon initiate another attempt to have Australia become a republic. The Vatican-funded European Union, with its soon to be established World Church ratified by the General Assembly of the United Nations will have achieved another milestone in the rebuilding of the old Roman Empire. Europe will have come full circle.

The real purpose behind the present push for republicanism is to bring about a change in our constitution, thus placing us in harmony with the WCPA world constitution. The flag would be replaced with a derivative of the United Nations flag; our badge (Commonwealth Coat of Arms) would disappear; all ties with the monarchy would cease; in fact the monarchy itself would be required to submit to the WCPA. Hence the current propaganda campaign against the “Royals” is an effort to weaken and destroy confidence

* suzerain- sovereign or state exercising political control over a dependent state, (ie. a subordinate power) in the Commonwealth. A new currency would be introduced known presently as the Eurodollar. With such changes soon to be introduced, we would come to the realization that our national sovereignty had been surrendered.

Since its introduction, the WCPA has developed until it is now known as the Parliamentarians Global Action (PGA).

MOTTO: “Many tongues, one voice”.

LOGO: The Tower of Babel.

It would be well for us to remember the origin of both of these symbols. Thousands of years ago an attempt was made to centralize the power of the nations through the building of the Tower of Babel on the future location of old Babylon. It was on this occasion, the Bible tells us, that God intervened to bring the plan to nought and disperse the people to other regions of the world. It was through the introduction of the different languages that the people had to disperse.

Trade and commerce will undergo radical changes as progress is made toward our acceptance into the PGA. The World Constitution gives control of all trade and commerce to the World Parliament. The policies of the United Nations World Trade Organisation will be enforced. Under the WTO, each nation would be required to retain only sufficient primary and manufactured goods for self sufficiency—all surplus goods must be sold through the WTO. There would be no trade between nations outside this commission. Under this world parliament commission, all underprivileged countries and peoples would be supplied with food and goods to guarantee their well-being. Australia is destined to become the food bowl of Asia.

On the surface, all of these measures seem very fair and democratic, no-one enjoys seeing underprivileged men women and children starving and dying for want of food and clothing. In fact it would be so easy to accept if it weren't for the prophecy found in the book of Revelation:

“And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.” Revelation 13:16, 17.

With such a confederacy of power as seen developing within the PGA, it would be natural to ask the question: Who will be the leader of this world parliament? Before answering this question, we should go to the Bible to see what God says about this growing confederacy and commonality emerging in Europe:

“These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast. “ Revelation 17:13.

Under the umbrella of the United Nations, the world leaders and statesmen are being drawn together in the world parliament (PGA) and when fully developed, they will be of one mind. They will all agree. They will have a commonality of purpose, “They will give their power and strength unto the beast”. In other words, a leader is chosen.

A few verses before the one quoted, a two-fold mystery is brought to our attention:

“ . . . Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her. . . ” Revelation 17:7.

The prophet John was amazed at what he saw. It was a mystery. However, when God pulls back the curtain, we see what the great men of this world cannot see. A beast in prophecy represent a nation, the very nature of this beast suggests that it represents an aggregate of nations. There is only one organization on earth that would fit this description, the PGA operating under the authority of the United Nations. Therefore it is no coincidence that the United States of America would, according to the prophecy, assume the role of spokesmen for the NWO (Revelation 13:11). Having gained permission and authority from the United Nations, she led out in operation “Desert Storm”, the crisis designated to announce the NWO. It should also be remembered that all participating nations fought under the United Nations flag. Since then we have seen established a UN GLOBAL ARMY, in an effort to put down aggression before it results in war.

However, in an effort to answer our question as to leadership of the NWO, we need to consider the second aspect of the mystery that amazed the prophet John. This was in the form of a woman seated upon the beast. A woman in Bible prophecy represents a church. When examining this aspect of the mystery, the solution to the symbol becomes obvious. The one that rides the beast controls the beast. So the kings, rulers and governors give their power and strength to the one representing the CHURCH. Here we have the uniting of church and state to rule the world. The very thing that is forbidden in our present constitution. This, and only this, is the reason for the present debate about Republicanism in Australia and the change to the flag. It is the Constitution they need to change.

The whole purpose behind the NWO is to undo everything that Protestantism has ever done for the world.

The very principles upon which our constitution is formed, the very principles that underpin the entire British Commonwealth, “British Common Law”—all this must go—and for no other reason than to make way for the World Government. It should be noted that the NWO is based upon “CANON LAW” (more recently called Natural Law or World Law), with a world court ready to be established in Rome. That should tell us something!

Who is the one seeking to control this NWO? To answer this we shall turn to the book “The Keys of this Blood” written by Malachi Martin. It should be noted that this gentleman is a Roman Catholic priest of the Jesuit order, and a close confidant of the pope. In discussing the global competition now under way for a leader of the NWO, Malachi Martin has this to say:

“It is not too much to say in fact that the chosen purpose of Pope John Paul’s pontificate, the engine that drives his papal grand policy, that determines his day to day, year by year strategy is to be the victor in the competition now well under way.” The Keys of This Blood page 16. “From the beginning of his pontificate, John Paul has been talking incessantly about the convergence of the nations. He would endow his papacy with an international profile, and as pope move around among the world’s leaders and nations vindicating a position for himself as a special leader among leaders. In that competition he plans to emerge the victor.” Ibid. page 480.

Peace and Safety

The greatest peace movement the world has ever seen is underway. Many are left cold with fear and trepidation, almost as though an unseen hand has struck with military-like precision to execute and co-ordinate a careful, well organized plan designed to bring unity among the nations.

Human history and in particular European history presents abundant testimony to the fact that men cannot congregate together for long without strife and bloodshed. Today the world that was divided by God is being brought together by mans inventions, in many instances the war of religions is threatening the peace and security of the world.

United Nations peace keeping forces are stationed through-out the world, just as the Roman Legions were positioned in their garrisons in the Roman Empire, their primary role was to put down any insurrection.

It has been said, that today there are approximately sixty civil disturbances in the world mainly due to religion. If we are to achieve lasting peace, some have suggested that these differences in religion must be put aside and a type of World Church established. Many church dignitaries at the present time are working to this end. They hope to present their plans to the General Assembly of the United Nations later in the year 2000.

Is the European Union the rebuilding of the "Holy Roman Empire" with the Pope established as leader, the real purpose of the New World Order?

"For when they shall say, peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they; shall not escape."
1 Thessalonians 5:3

The Act of Settlement, 1701

For several centuries Great Britain had experienced the turmoil of intolerance and civil unrest as the struggle for control of the monarchy swayed back and forth. Would the people continue to embrace Catholicism or would they accept the truth and stand unitedly under the flag of Protestantism?

Finally in 1701, after a long and bitter conflict in 1689, a decision was enacted. "The Act of Settlement" was signed. What did this act or document do for Great Britain, and eventually the British Commonwealth? It established once and for all that Britain and the monarchy would embrace Protestantism. It also stated that no Roman Catholic could ascend the throne of England. In other words the Commonwealth and the monarchy was to be Protestant in all its principles of Government.

The Jesuit Order was Rome's answer. Given the task of countering the Reformation, they set out to restore the lost fortunes of the Papacy. What would Rome give to again rule in England? Today we are witnessing the expansionary moves of the European Union. This expansion is being advocated and sponsored by the Vatican and the United States of America. It is hoped that sometime in the very near future that England will become a full member of this Union. However, before this comes about, England must do something about the "Act of Settlement". As the European Union is an attempt to reconstruct the Roman Empire, the "Act of Settlement" must be either abolished or rewritten so as to allow the possibility of any future monarch to be a Roman Catholic, either by virtue of birth or marriage. For England to be a full member of the European Union, she must have her statutes and laws as set out in the "Act of Settlement" rewritten in order to enact European Union laws and statutes. This would also open the way for the Church of England to unite with the Papacy and thus bring an end to Protestantism as we know it. This is the real purpose of the Papal Jubilee. As that old English reformer J.A. Wylie stated in his book "The History of the Reformation", "destroy Protestantism in England and you destroy Protestantism."

In Bible prophecy we discover that as a result of the French Revolution the Papacy in 1798 received a deadly wound opening the way for the Protestant Reformation to increase momentum. The Papacy was stripped of all civil authority, but prophecy states very clearly (Rev 13:3) that that wound would be healed. If attempts in the British Parliament by the present incumbent Prime Minister, Mr Tony Blair, to have the "Act of Settlement" rewritten are successful, then the world will witness a significant healing of that wound.

A Prophetic Panorama

From the crest of Olivet, Jesus looked upon Jerusalem. In full view were the magnificent buildings of the temple. The rays of the setting sun lighted up the snowy whiteness of its marble walls and gleamed from golden gate and tower and pinnacle. What child of Israel could gaze upon the scene without a thrill of joy and admiration! But far other thoughts occupied the mind of Jesus. "When He was come near, He beheld the city, and wept over it" (Luke 19:41). His tears were not for Himself, He wept for the doomed thousands of Jerusalem. Jerusalem had been honoured of God above all the earth. Had Israel as a nation preserved her allegiance to Heaven, Jerusalem would have stood forever, the elect of God. But the history of that favoured people was a record of backsliding and rebellion.

For three years the Lord of Light and glory had gone in and out among His people. A homeless wanderer, reproach and penury His daily lot, He lived to minister to the needs and lighten the woes of men, to plead with them to accept the gift of life. But Israel had turned from her best Friend and only Helper. The pleadings of His love had been despised. His counsels spurned, His warnings ridiculed. The hour of hope and pardon was fast passing.

As Christ looked upon Jerusalem, the doom of a whole city, a whole nation, was before Him. He heard the tread of armies marshaling for war. He heard the voice of mothers and children crying for bread in the besieged city. He saw her holy house, her palaces and towers, given to the flames, and where once they stood, only a heap of smoldering ruins. Looking down the ages, He saw the covenant people scattered in every land.

Christ saw in Jerusalem a symbol of the world hardened in unbelief and rebellion, hastening on to meet the retributive judgements of God.

The Majesty of Heaven in tears! That scene reveals to us the exceeding sinfulness of sin; it shows how hard a task it is, even for Infinite Power, to save the guilty from the consequence of transgressing the law of God. Jesus, looking down to the last generation, saw the world involved in a deception similar to that which caused the destruction to Jerusalem. The great sin of the Jews was their rejection of Christ; the great sin of the Christian world would be their rejection of the law of God, the foundation of His government in Heaven and earth. Millions in bondage to sin, slaves to Satan, doomed to suffer the second death, would refuse to listen to the words of truth in their day of visitation.

The disciples had been filled with awe and wonder at Christ's prediction of the overthrow of the temple. The future was mercifully veiled from the disciples. Christ presented before them an outline of the prominent events to take place before the close of time. The prophecy which He uttered was two-fold in its meaning; while foreshadowing the destruction of Jerusalem, it prefigured also the terrors of the last great day.

By stubborn rejection of divine love and mercy, the Jews had caused the protection of God to be withdrawn from them, and Satan was permitted to rule them according to his will.

The destruction of Jerusalem is a fearful and solemn warning to all who are trifling with the offers of divine grace and resisting the pleadings of divine mercy. In the fate of the chosen city we may behold the doom of a world that has rejected God's mercy and trampled upon His law.

Let men beware lest they neglect the lesson conveyed to them in the words of Christ. The world is no more ready to credit the message for this time than were the Jews to receive the Saviour's warning concerning Jerusalem. Come when it may, the day of God will come unawares to the ungodly.

When Jesus revealed to His disciples the fate of Jerusalem and the scenes of the second advent. He foretold also the experience of His people from the time when He should be taken from them, to His return in power and glory. Penetrating deeper into the future, His eye discerned the fierce, wasting tempests that were to beat upon His followers in the coming ages of darkness and persecution. In a few brief utterances of awful significance He foretold the portion which the rulers of this world would mete out to the church of God.

Paganism foresaw that should the gospel triumph, her temples and altars would be swept away; therefore she summoned her forces to destroy Christianity. The fires of persecution were kindled.

These persecutions, beginning under Nero, continued with greater or less fury for centuries. Christians were falsely accused of the most dreadful crimes and declared to be the cause of great calamities—famine, pestilence, and earthquake. Great numbers were thrown to wild beasts or burned alive in amphitheatres. Some were crucified; others were covered with the skins of wild animals and thrust into the arena to be torn by dogs. Vast multitudes assembled to enjoy the sight and greeted their dying agonies with laughter and applause.

Wherever they sought refuge, the followers of Christ were hunted like beasts of prey. They were forced to seek concealment in desolate and solitary places. These called to mind the words of their Master, that when persecuted for Christ's sake, they were to be exceeding glad, for great would be their reward in Heaven; for so the prophets had been persecuted before them. They rejoiced that they were accounted worthy to suffer for the truth, and songs of triumph ascended from the midst of crackling flames. Looking upward by faith, they saw Christ and angels gazing upon them with the deepest interest and regarding their steadfastness with approval. A voice came down to them from the throne of God; "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Revelation 2:10).

In vain were Satan's efforts to destroy the church of Christ by violence. God's workmen were slain, but His work went steadily forward. The gospel continued to spread and the number of its adherents to increase. "The oftener we are mown down by you, the more in number we grow; the blood of Christians is seed" (Tertullian, Apology, par. 50)

Satan therefore laid his plans to war more successfully against the government of God by planting his banner in the Christian church. The great adversary now endeavoured to gain by artifice what he failed to secure by force.

Persecution ceased, and in its stead were substituted the dangerous allurements of temporal prosperity and worldly honour. Idolaters were led to receive a part of the Christian faith, while they rejected other essential truths. They professed to accept Jesus as the Son of God, but they had no conviction of sin and felt no need of repentance or of a change of heart. With some concessions on their part they proposed that Christians should make concessions, that all might unite on the platform of belief in Christ.

Now the church was in fearful peril, Prison, torture, fire, and sword were blessings in comparison with this. Some of the Christians stood firm. Others were in favour of yielding or modifying some features of their faith. Under a cloak of pretended Christianity, Satan was insinuating himself into the church to corrupt their faith and turn their minds from the word of truth.

Most of the Christians at last consented to lower their standard, and a union was formed between Christianity and paganism. Although the worshipers of idols professed to be converted, and united with the church, they still clung to their idolatry, only changing the object of their worship to images of Jesus, and even of Mary and the saints. Unsound doctrines, superstitious rites, and idolatrous ceremonies were incorporated into her faith and worship. The Christian religion became corrupted, and the church lost her purity and power.

There were some, however, who were not misled. They still maintained their fidelity to the Author of truth, and worshipped God alone.

Satan exulted that he had succeeded in deceiving so large a number of the followers of Christ. He then brought his power to bear more fully upon these, and inspired them to persecute those who remained true to God. These apostate Christians, uniting with half-pagan companions, directed their warfare against the most essential features of the doctrines of Christ.

It required a desperate struggle for those who would be faithful to stand firm against deceptions and abominations introduced into the church. The Bible was not accepted as the standard of faith. The doctrine of religious freedom was termed heresy, and its upholders were hated and proscribed.

After a long and severe conflict, the faithful saw that separation was an absolute necessity. They dared not tolerate errors fatal to their own souls, and set an example which would imperil the faith of their children's children. They felt that even peace would be too dearly purchased at the sacrifice of principle.

The message as it is given in this brochure tells us that the pope sees himself as the "geopolitical giant of his age". The serene and confident servant of the grand design of the NEW WORLD ORDER or WORLD GOVERNMENT.

"For verily I say unto you, That many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them; and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them." Matthew 13:17.
